HUMOROUS ITEMS.

Anna Story was recently married to Robert Short. A very pleasant way of making a Story short.

"Vill you dake sumding?" said a Dutch tee-totaler to a friend, while standing near a tavern.

"I don't care if I do," was the reply.

"Vell, den let's dake a walk."

A sailor looking serious in a chapel, was asked by the clergyman if he felt any change, whereupon the tar put his hand into his pocket and replied that he hadn't got a cent.

A Baltimore paper says that a young lady was recently discharged from one of the largest pickle factories in that city, because she was so sweet she took the acid out of all the vinegar.

A sporting young lady says: "if the course of true love does never run smooth, why don't they water it and roll it regularly so many hours a day, until they get the course so smooth that any monkey can run upon it?"

A woman applied to a magistrate for a summons against a neighbor. "She called me a thief your worship. Can't I make her prove it?" "No doubt you could," said the magistrate, "but I think you had better not."

At a recent assizes in Ireland, the foreman of the jury, placing his hand on his heart, and with a voice choked with emotion, gave in the following verdict: "The accused is guilty, but we have our doubts as to the identity."

Host (who had just finished carving a turkey): "Will you have a small piece of the dark meat, or a small piece of the white meat?" Hungry guest—who is addicted to the habit of plain speaking—"Thank you; I'll take a large piece of both!"

AFTER THE DANCE—Charles: "Tell me, Laura, why that sadness? Tell me why that look of care? Why has fled that look of gladness that thy face was wont to wear?" Laura:—"Charles, 'tis useless to dissemble; well my face may wear a frown, for I've lost my largest hair-pin, and my chignon's coming down."

Parson, I would much rather hear you preach," said a baffled, swindling horse jockey, "than to see you interfere in bargains between man and man." "Well," replied the parson, "if you had been where you ought to have been, last Sunday, you would have heard me preach." "Where was that?" inquired the jockey. "In the State Prison," returned the clergyman.

A countryman stopped at the Maxwell House, Nashville, for dinner. The waiter inquired what he would have, and was told by the countryman to bring "something of what he had." The waiter brought him a regular dinner upon small dishes, as is the usual form, and set them around his plate.—The countryman surveyed them carefully for a moment, and then broke out, "Well, I like your samples, now bring my dinner."

TWO WAYS OF TELLING IT.—Jenkins says: "The profusion and color of her hair would lead one to look upon it as though it was spun by the nimble fingers of the easy hours as they glided through bright June days, whose sunny rays of light had been caught in the meshes and were content to go no farther." Joe Bowers expresses the same thing by saying, "her hair was awful red."

"If you do not close that window waiter, I shall die from the draught," said a lady at dinner.

"And if you do close it, I shall die from the heat in this hot weather!" exclaimed a stouter fair lady.

Then there was a giggle among the guests over the dilemma of the waiter, when a literary gentleman present said "My good fellow, your duty is clear; close the window and kill one lady, and open it again and kill the other lady."

We have tidings from Boston of a clergyman of Massachusetts who, on exchange, preached in a brother's pulpit. Taking a note which he found when he opened the Bible, he read that Brother requested the prayers of the Church that the loss of his wife might be blessed to him, etc. The preacher prayed most fervently. To his amazement and mortification he found afterwards that the note had lain in the Bible a year, while the bereaved gentleman was on this Sabbath sitting with a new wife in the congregation.
